Political Parties of Cuba.

Just now when the Cubans are holding a convention for the purpose of formulating a constitution for the new republic the character of the several political parties that have sprung up since the island was freed from the Spanish yoke is of general interest, especially to the readers of the daily press who have been following the fortunes of these people since the close of the war. The positions of the three parties, whose representatives are participating in deliberations of the constitutional convention, known as the National Republican and Union-Democratic, are thus described by a recent student of Cuban "In a broad sense the Nationalists and Republicans are the radicals and the Union-Democrats are the conservatives. The Republicans are really ultra radicals, and the Nationalists are radicals of less intensity. As they say in Cuba, the Republicans are willing to fight it all over again, with the United States if necessary, to secure full indeself-governing, but they want no superof any kind by the United States The Nationalists want full sovereignty fight for it. It is possible that they would be willing to accept some kind of disguised supervision of their national affairs by the United States and prob ably in their hearts be glad of it. The Union-Democrats also assert that they are believers in full independence of Cuba, but they make no secret of th fact that they would like this country to have supervision over Cuba's foreign relations and also, in return for certain commercial guarantees, to relieve the island from the necessity of maintaining No formal party exists of those who favor annexation to the United States although, of course, many Cubans who have vast commercial interests at stake and long most for the prosperity of Cuba regardless of political theories so long as the general idea of self-government obtains, think that annexation would be for the island its best fortune."

control of the constitutional convention together with the Republicans, the pres ident of the body being a Republican. Owing to the influential support of the Cuban patriot General Gomez, the preponderance of the support of the people is with the Nationalist party. With these facts before him the reader should be enabled to follow future events in Cuba intelligently.

Anti-Fussing Association.

Of all the odd secret societies in the country the Anti-Fussing Association of Harvard College, composed mainly of woman haters, takes the lead. It is really serious in purpose and possesses a practical aim. An article in the New York Sun gives quite a detailed account of the working of this unique organiza-"Fusser" is the Harvard name applied to a young man who frequents the society of young women, and "fuss ing" is the term which describes the social activity of a student among the fair sex. The main outlets for the Haryard student's social vigor are through vesper services, teas in his room, calls, dances and dinners. The Anti-Fussing Asociation is designed to suppress all this. When the president first explained the nature of the club, it seemed like a joke, but he was very serious and told the story of its foundation, its aims, and its achievements. When students attempted to gain admission to the French lectures last year it appears they were unsuccessful because the Cambridge matrons and girls had filled the hall. The men became angry, had a meeting to talk the matter over, and at that meeting best news features of the Intelligence evolved the A. F. A. The president without a line of credit, the State evolved the A. F. A. The president stated its origin as follows:

"We thought it was time to restrict the movement of giving over the university to women, and to prevent lectures from being monopolized by Cambridge women, who brought their knitting, and by Radcliffe girls, who ate candy during the lecture. Our original aim was to assert the rights of students over audiences of Cambridge womenfolk. But we were not satisfied with that. We saw that the students were much to blaime; that with vespers and teas college men were being ruined by too much society. So we thought test to cast the beam out of our own eye and to reclaim men who were fall ing because of "Gussing."

While too much devotion to the fair

While too much devotion to the fair sex by students is quite distracting to progress in their studies, a mild indulgin the companionship of young ladies is quite a liberal education for the young man attending college, for it polishes him and rounds out a culture he could obtain in no other way. The association is not a sorehead, sorehearted or broken-hearted affair, composed of those who have loved and lost,

The founders of the association take a hard, common-sense view of college life, in that the young man is sent to college to learn, not to waste his precious time in loving, or, as they will have it. "fussing." In some re spects it is a very check on the young student whose inclinations would lead gles for shipbuilding from the works of him to fritter away his opportunities for a college education ome months ago the Intelligencer cited the annovance occasioned by the ringing of church bells, distracting the sick and upsetting the nerves of the well. It maintained at that time that the necessity for the ringing of church bells had long since ceased to exist on account of the general use of watches and clocks, and it quoted several ministers who agreed with these views. The "bells of Shandon," no doubt, sounded very grand on "the pleasant waters of whanging and banging are anything but agreeable music in the city, where four or five churches with noisy bell towers are bunched in one square.

Distracting Bell Ringing.

A queer contention about this same matter has sprung up in Brooklyn, Correspondence containing important where one church complains of another that the ringing of the chimes of one while the congregation of the other is at worship interrupts its service. The New York Times in calling attention to this dispute between neighboring churches, contends that behind the discussion "is the broader and more important question whether the ringing of church bells in a city, being an unnecessary noise and extremely disturbing to a great many people, is not a public nuisance which should be suppressed." Continuing its reflections on the bell ringing nuisance the Times

The Capital's Centennial

In Washington to-day the ceremo nies incident to the celebration of the centennial anniversary of the removal of the seat of government from Philadelphia to Washington will begin. The corner stone of the capitol building was laid in 1793, but the last touches on the present magnificent structure were not put on until 1891, when the terraces of the capitol were completed. Since 1800 the building has undergone many changes, and once was partially de-In its present majestic proportions it structure of its character in the world. And what wonderful changes have taken place in the city since it was founded by Washington. In 1800 it had a population of only 8,000, while the census just completed shows it has 286,000. But the increase in population is as nothing compared to the marvelous transformation of its topography a change that was inaugurated in 1871 by the famous Governor Alexander R. Shepherd, who, although accused of jobbery, made it one of the most beautiful cities in the world, virtually bringing it out of the mire, and winning for it the name of "the City of Magnificent Dis-tances." This evolution from a sprawiing, unkempt, unpayed and dirty city required ten years time and cost $25,-000,000. But It is worth it.

Is What an "Unreconstructed Democrat" Calls the Late A. W. Campbell-His Appeal to Lincoln Given Attention.

To the Editor of the Intelligencer.

SIR:-I see considerable discussion in the columns of your paper regarding to whom the honor for the formation of the state of West Virginia should be awarded, and a place in statuary hall be assigned. Here let me say that, in frequent conversations with the late A. W. Campbell, touching this question, the writer often, in a friendly way, the writer often, in a friendly way, charged him with the "iniquity" of being the father of the movement to cut off from the territory in which were the graves of all the great men who reflected honor on the soil of Virginia—mentioning Washington, the Father of His Country, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Marshall, Randolph, Benjamin Watkins and others. To this Mr. Campbell servented a safest tweet was western. responded, saying it was a matter of life and death to the citizens of this iffe and death to the citizens of this section of the state; that we were on the border, so near Ohlo and Pennsylvania, and being southern soil, we would have heen overrun, and all our homes would have been laid waste, and utter ruin would have resulted from our holding on to the old state.

Went to See Lincels.

Went to See Lincoln.

He also said that he had visited Washington, and talked the matter over with President Lincoln. Finally, when the question had opened such a fearful condition, he one night telegraphed President Lincoln, asking if he would acknowledge or recognize the new state immediately, for all hope was gone. Mr. Lincoln recognized the state the next day. The writer now fully concurs with Mr. Campbell that such would have been the consequences had not the state been recognized. Not many years since, Mr. Campbell wrote a lengthy article for the Intelligence, in which he endeavored to vindicate the regularity and legality of the creation of the state and the manner by which it was brought about. Mr. Jacob, editor of the Wellsburg Herald, a Republican of the strictest school, an able writer and a true with President Lincoln. Finally, when est school, an able writer and a true est senson, an able writer and a true man in all his experiences, wrote an ar-ticle for the Herald a few days later referring to the argument made by Mr Campbell, in which he said: "If the sep-aration of the state was regular and legal, the Declaration of Independence legal, the Declaration of Independence from England was regular and lawful." Mr. Jacob said it was a war measure, and nothing else. This is my recollection, briefly stinted. I sent a copy of the Herald to Mr. Campbell, who was then in the west, hoping he would reply, but he never did.

Not many of Mr. Campbell's contemporaries of that date are now living, but should any one feel enough interest in the subject, let him examine the files of the Intelligencer of that period and see the work and deep personal interest Mr. Campbell felt in the matter, and

Mr. Campbell felt in the matter, and, admitting the power of the press, I think no on would withhold from Mr. Campbell the honor—if it is an honor—of being the father of West Virginia. UNRECONSTRUCTED DEMOCRAT. Bethany, W. Va., Dec. 11.
